

Laurel Art Guild's November 2010 Program: Twitter for Artists

This month the Laurel Art Guild General Meeting will include an informative presentation on Twitter for Artists. Robyn Church Hatton will provide individualized help and encouragement for artists new to the 140 character long message system and culture of Twitter. This presentation will aid artists in maximizing their online skills. Members who bring WiFi enabled lap tops will be able to participate in a practice session during which we will put to use information about the simple method of online communication called Twitter. Facebook, blogs and web sites will also be discussed briefly. You do not need any prior knowledge of Twitter to attend.

Robyn is a past President of LAG who instructs from her home studio and at Montpelier Art Center. She currently exhibits primarily oils, and has a background that includes four harness weaving, sculpture in metal and clays, watercolor, acrylic, tempera, charcoal, pastel and graphite. She is a member of the Oil Painters of America, and several other art associations. She was raised by a mother who was part of the Taos Art Colony, and later went on to Holland and then to college courses and various instructors to learn more about art and it's makers. She has her own art business and enjoys sharing the studio with three creative sons, and one daughter, who is a painter in her Senior Year at MICA.

Come and enjoy a relaxed and encouraging evening of learning to maximize your online skills with other artists.
